

Students entering the profession of medical radiography must understand that they are entering a field that requires meeting specific professional standards that other career choices might not require.

Professional dress, appearance, attitude, demeanor, and modes of communication must meet specific standards in order to maintain the confidence of the patient. Those under the care of a radiographer present themselves from all ages, cultures, and various ethnic origins; therefore:

Trendy modes of dress, adornment, decoration, etc., as determined to be “trendy” by the program faculty in its sole discretion, are expressly prohibited.

The Program has an established dress code and a code of ethics, both for your review prior to consideration by the Admissions Committee, of your application for admission.
